

The disability insurance gap:

Do you really need group disability insurance?

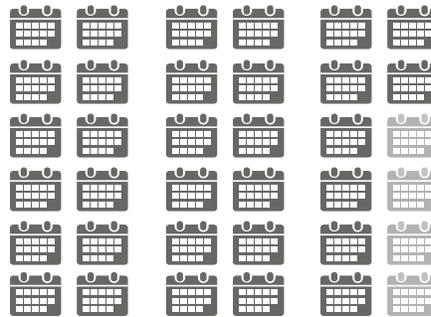

1 in 4 workers will suffer a disability in their career.¹

68% of Americans would find it difficult to meet their current financial obligations if their next paycheck were delayed for just one week.¹

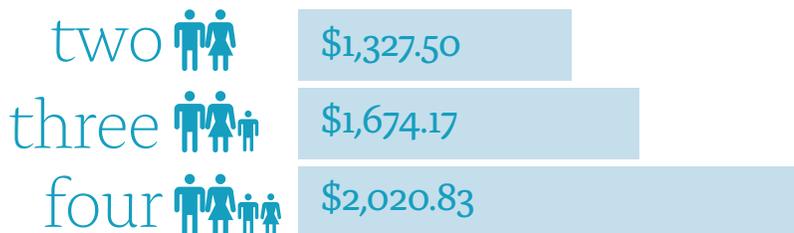

90% of disabilities are caused by illnesses rather than accidents, which means they could happen to anyone, at any time.¹

The average individual disability claim lasts 31.6 months.¹

Social Security Disability Insurance (SSDI) might NOT replace income as you'd expected.

The average monthly benefit from SSDI is $1,165²—well below the federal poverty guidelines for a family of:³

65%

65% of applications for Social Security disability benefits are initially denied, and the appeals process can take months—even years.¹

You might NOT qualify for workers' compensation.

Less than 5% of disabling accidents or illnesses are work related, so 95% are not covered by workers' compensation.¹

How much sick leave do you have?

According to the U.S. Department of Labor, employees with at least one year of service receive an average of eight sick days a year.⁴ Imagine what happens on day nine.

Do you have enough in emergency savings?

Roughly a third of American adults don't have any emergency savings, while 47% said their savings would cover living expenses for 90 days or less.⁵
